About the last three songs on this album.

Smiddi, the songwriter/keyboardist of JWD, put the word out that the band was looking to have a DJ join them. Smiddi's friend, Sonny Boy, went to college with someone named DJ Doze which led to numbers being exchanged. Soon Smiddi was driving to meet Doze at his recording facility the next town over. While sharing some beers they discussed music and began to collaborate on a song. The following day the excited lead singer of JWD asked how the meeting went and if Doze had shown interest in joining the band. Smiddi responded that they planned to meet again and finish the song they had started but the DJ had no interest in joining a band. Smiddi then added, "Don't worry, he'll be our DJ within two weeks." Over the next two weeks they completed what are the last three songs on this album, and as Smiddi predicted, Doze had joined the band.
